PREFACE.

THE completion of this work has been delayed much longer than was anticipated, when the design of publication was first announced. It is believed, however, that the subscribers will not feel that they have cause for complaint on this ground when they are informed, that the delay was owing partly to the extension of the work to above one hundred pages more than was promised, and partly to the unwearied pains that have been taken to make it as comprehensive and perfect as possible.

The selection of tunes has been made with great care, and it contains every variety of metre and expression that can be required for the sacred poetry of the Church. For this purpose the standard collections of Psalmody in this country, and especially the Handel and Haydn Societies of Boston, perhaps the best, have been examined. But principal use has been made of two most excellent works, Webbe's collection of Psalmody and Gardiner's Sacred Melodies, never published in this country. But neither their harmony nor distribution of parts have been uniformly followed. For the prose parts of the Liturgy designed to be sung, there will be found a larger number of Chants than has ever before been published in this country, selected from the works of the best masters, and arranged in such a manner as to render this style of music easy of performance.

But the whole collection, however complete, must not be expected to contain every tune which each individual would desire to possess. A book prepared upon this principle would be far too large for general utility. Many tunes which have been for a time popular in particular places, but which have not merit sufficient to secure general or continued favour, have been omitted. Others which are common, and are in very general use, such as Devizes, Wells, Denmark, Cheshunt, and many more have been omitted for this very reason, that churches and individuals need not be obliged to purchase duplicates of what they already possess. If any individual or congregation, should be at first disappointed at not finding in this collection some favourite tunes, let them remember that they have already copies of those tunes, and their omission has afforded room for the introduction of music perhaps equally good, which they might not otherwise have seen. The proportion of new tunes, never before published in this country, will be found very considerable, but yet these have not been introduced to the exclusion of standard tunes of universally acknowledged excellence, such as Old Hundred, Windsor, St. Ann's, &c.

The melodies have been given according to the best usage, and in keys best adapted to congregational singing, and the harmonies have been arranged with scrupulous attention to accuracy and purity. The score contains four parts. The upper staff is the Tenor, which, from a necessary compliance with custom, is written in the Treble Cliff, and therefore the harmonist will observe that it appears one octave above its real place. The second staff is the 2nd. Treble or Alto, and this reads in its true place. This arrangement was esteemed advisable on account of the great scarcity of male Alto, or Contra-Tenor voices. All those female voices that are of a low compass, which are in fact Contra-Tenor voices, should sing the 2nd Treble. When, however, a male Alto singer that has been accustomed to the common music books of this country, takes this part, he must transpose it an octave higher. The third staff contains the Treble or Air, having the stems turned up, and these notes in combination with those, the stems of which are turned down, and all those in the Bass Cliff, constitute the Organ or Piano Forte accompaniment. The fourth staff is the Bass, the lower notes of which are for the voice; the others which sometimes occur are for the instrument. In performing this music a Treble or Tenor voice may sing the air alone, or with a Bass voice; but neither of the two upper parts should be sung unless with the whole four, nor when the whole four are sung together, should any but a Treble voice sing the air.

The harmonies of all the tunes have been corrected, and the organ accompaniment arranged by Mr. P. K. Moran, Organist of St. John's, New York, whose long established reputation gives assurance that this part of the work is well done. Next to him, the editor of the work is under great obligations to Mr. Benjamin Carr of Philadelphia, well known for his enlightened and long continued exertions in the cause of sacred music, to Mr. John Paddon, Organist of St. Paul's in Boston, to Mr. Darley, Organist of St. Stephens Philadelphia, and to Mr. Gear, Organist of Grace Church, New York. These gentlemen have improved the work by their suggestions, and by several of their own valuable compositions. As to its mechanical execution it is believed, that taking into consideration the difficulty of expressing an Organ part with types, it will be found not inferior to that of any musical work which has lately been printed. For the great ingenuity and pains required, especially in the organ accompaniment, the editor is indebted to Mr. Peter C. Smith, with the assistance of Mr. Dodson. As to himself, the editor will only observe, that had he been aware that the work would have cost him one half of the labour and time he has devoted to it, he would have been deterred from the undertaking. If, however, it shall be found to improve the taste for sacred music, and to promote its practice in public and family worship, he will not regret the exertions he has made.

GENERAL DIRECTIONS

FOR THE PERFORMANCE OF SACRED MUSIC

PSALMODY.

Sacred Music is the application of sweet sounds to celebrating the praise and glory of God. In order then, to render this service acceptable to him, as well as edifying to ourselves, it should ever be remembered that preparation of heart is the first and most essential step. Without this, the finest strains of melody or harmony are no better than mockery, "a solemn sound upon a thoughtless tongue." But if the voice responds to devout affections of the soul, sounds coarse and inharmonious will be acceptable in the ears of the God of Sabbaoth; and even those whom nature has deprived both of ear and voice, and who cannot therefore, without great discomfort to their fellow worshippers, be vocal in their praise, may thus "sing and make melody in their hearts unto the Lord."

The true design of Sacred Music then, being to excite and to express devotional feeling; this design should be kept in constant view, both in a selection of tunes for the use of the Church, and in the manner of performing them. As the tunes should be simple, dignified, and solemn, so also should the style of singing them exhibit the same characteristics. In this collection will be found tunes of every variety of character, from those which speak the highest sentiments of praise, to those suitable to the expression of the deepest penitence. Care has been taken to adapt appropriate words to these tunes. But as portions of Psalms or Hymns may be appointed to be sung which have no tune assigned to them, or as the tune assigned may not be known, or may not be approved, and another must be sought for; in such cases particular attention should be given by the person whose duty it is to select the tunes. He should first study the general character of the words, that he may avoid the error of setting a jubilant tune to penitential words, or vice versa, a tune in the minor mood to words of joyful praise.

Having thus adapted together the tune and the portion of words, according to their general character, he should next look at the distinct verses, and prepare to make slight alterations in the performance, as respects faster or slower, piano or forte, crescendo or diminuendo, as the sentiment may require. This is the only way by which a proper musical effect can be given, when the same notes are to be repeated to words vary-

NOTE.—These directions, while the perusal of them may perhaps be profitable to all who take an interest in Church Music, they yet suppose some knowledge of the rudiments of this art. There are many good treatises. Among the best and cheapest are Mr. Samuel Dyer's Vocal Preceptor, and Mr. Thomas Hasting's "Musical Reader." This latter gentleman has written an excellent work on "Musical Taste," worthy of attentive perusal.

ing in expression. And by a little attention to this point, and a little explanation and illustration, a choir or congregation will soon feel the propriety and beauty of thus making the sound an echo to the sense; and they will learn to do it without any particular direction. Besides the advantage thus gained in point of musical expression, there will be a much greater one in keeping the singers constantly attentive to the meaning of the words they are uttering.

As a general rule it may be observed, that, in single tunes or tunes which carry through one verse only, the piano or diminuendo may fall upon the third line, and in double tunes upon the two first lines of the second verse; the forte and crescendo may, in most instances succeed to the next lines. But no rule can be given of uniform application. As an illustration of the above observations, we will take the 100th Psalm, and the well known tune Old Hundred, page 3. The singing of the first verse should be commenced moderately forte. In this manner should the first two lines be sung. The third line, "Glad homage pay with awful mirth," should be piano, and the last line should be forte. The second verse should be piano throughout. The third verse should begin moderately, it should gradually increase, till the last line, which should be double forte. The last verse should commence rather piano, the third line should be crescendo, and the last forte. The Gloria Patri should always be full. As a farther illustration, take the 165th Hymn, and the tune St. George's, page 14. The first verse should be animated, and moderately loud. The second verse should be sung in slower time, and more piano. In the third verse, the first two lines should be piano, the last two crescendo. In the fourth verse there is a greater contrast, the first two lines should be rather slow and soft, the last two should have a decided and strong utterance. The last verse should be animated and forte. To the careful reader who will turn to the above mentioned tunes and words, and compare them with the explanations thus given, the observations made, in regard to varying the expression of the tune in conformity with the sentiment contained in the words, will be sufficiently obvious.

Attention should be paid to another point which has been much neglected in Psalmody, viz. accentuation. The different verses of our Psalms and Hymns vary so much in this particular—the first verse commencing, perhaps, with an unaccented syllable, while the second begins with a strongly accented word, that when the same notes are used in both cases the correct ear is greatly offended. Wherever it is practicable, if the poetry commences with an accented syllable, the tune should begin with a full bar; on the contrary, when the Psalm or Hymn begins with an unaccented syllable, the tune should commence with part of a bar. But, as in succeeding verses there is often a change in this respect, we must give some attention to remedy the difficulty. It is to be done with much greater ease than may at first be apprehended. As an illustration, let the reader take the 97th Psalm, and the tune German Air, on the 10th page. Here the tune begins with a full bar; but the first syllable of the first verse is unaccented. To sing correctly then, begin the word "Jehovah" on part of a bar, and slur the two first notes of the tune to the 2d syllable "ho-." At the end of the tune the notes, as they should be sung, are printed in full. The next verse begins with a strongly accented word, "Darkness;" and here the accent of the tune and of the words coincides. Verse 10, also, "Ye who to serve," &c. accords with the tune; but verse 12, "Rejoice," &c. must be commenced with what may be termed a starting note, as above. Another illustration may be found in the Evening Hymn, page 181, "Glory to thee, my God," &c. Here the first syllable is strongly accented, and yet as the tune is usually arranged the accent is made to come on the second syllable, "ry," which is unquestionably wrong. In this book, then, the tune begins with a full bar. But, as in the next verse, "Forgive me, Lord," &c. the first syllable is unaccented, the tune should have the starting note, which is expressed by small notes. By a little attention to these observations, the rhetorical and the musical accent need not, in any case, be permitted to clash. Take an example not marked in the book.—Hymn 67, and a beautiful tune, Darley, on the 147th page.—The tune begins with a full bar, as is correct; the first syllable of the words being strongly accented. "High on the bending willows hung." But in the next verse the accent is entirely different, "Awake! thy loudest raptures raise," and, unless we would produce a most disagreeable effect, the beginning of the tune must be changed. Suppose, then, we introduce part of a bar, a quaver on F in the treble, for the first syllable "A-." The next syllable, "wake," we sing to the first note of the tune; then slur the two quavers, for the word "thy." The tune and words then proceed regularly. Thus with a little attention and judgment, the principal inconvenience, arising from using the same tune for many verses, may be avoided. To make the time correct, it may be added to, or taken from the last bar of the tune. Still, however, perfect accuracy in regard to accentuation should not be anticipated or sought for. Nor is any attention to the above rules to be considered as absolutely essential to congregational singing. Perhaps the object cannot be effected, except when there is a good choir. Unquestionably the perfection of Psalmody, considering its great design, is when the whole body of a congregation unites, as with one heart, and one voice, to sing the praises of God. Then, faults of accent and occasional discords are overwhelmed in the general effect; even a musical ear will be affected with its majesty and power, and the devout worshipper will desire nothing more refined, to stir up the affections of his heart, and to open his mouth with praises to God.

ANTHEM SINGING.

As the proper execution of Psalmody requires the voices of all in the congregation who can sing; the singing of Anthems should be confined to the choir. In the ancient Jewish Church, persons were expressly appointed by God to conduct his praises, and the assembled congregation occasionally united in the loud chorus. So also in the primitive Church, and in the Church of England, Anthems are performed by a choir, to which the congregation are supposed to listen, with devout sentiments. The form of the Anthem is naturally derived from the structure of some of the Psalms, in which we frequently find the soliloquy, the dialogue, and the chorus. Thus, as has been observed, "The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble," is the voice of a company encouraging a Priest in his intercession. He then expresses his confidence in these words, "Now know that I the Lord helpeth his annointed." Then all join together in supplication. "Save Lord, and hear us when we call upon thee." The solo, the verse, and the chorus, in church music express all those turns of the sacred poetry when properly applied. But as Anthems are not often introduced in the service of our churches, and as it is presumed they will only be attempted when there is an able and well instructed choir, no farther observations are requisite in this place.

CHANTING.

Although Chants are in themselves the most simple of all kinds of musical composition, yet to execute them with propriety and effect requires much practice. The single chant consists of two strains, the first containing three, and the last, four bars; the double chant, consists of four strains, of three and four bars arranged alternately. The first bar of each strain is the chanting note; and to this, the principal part of each half verse of the prose Psalms is recited; the remaining bars in each strain, form a species of cadence, and are to be expressed in the singing voice. The principal object to be attended to in chanting, is a distinct and forcible articulation of the words. They must be correctly accented, and where a stop occurs, it may be marked by a short rest. The recited part of the verse must occupy no longer time than a good reader would require to pronounce it, and the cadence must be given in correct time, the beat of which can be felt. A great difficulty in arranging the words of a chant, is to know when to break off from the words of the recitative, and to begin the cadence. There are two errors to be avoided. The first, is the drawling effect produced by giving in every instance only single syllables to each note of the cadence; the second is the hurrying and confused effect, produced by taking too many syllables from the recitative, and crowding them into the cadence. The latter error, however, is by far most injurious, as it always destroys musical rhythm, and produces a light and trifling manner of singing, very inconsistent with sacred words.

In the adaptation of the words to the Chants contained in this book, an attempt has been made, and it is hoped successfully, to avoid both these errors. The general rules of adaptation are as follows, by following these rules any portions of the Psalter, or prose Psalms, may be chanted.

It is to be observed in the first place, that every verse is divided into two parts, which division in the old prayer books and to this day, in all English editions, is marked with a colon stop for this very purpose. In the later editions of the Liturgy of our Church, this dividing point has been omitted, whether by design, or through ignorance of its use, we cannot say. But certainly, while our rubrics direct that certain prose portions of the service may be "sung or said," this great facility for singing, and one of such ancient standing should not be done away.

Suppose then, the verse to be divided at the semicolon or the comma, which most nearly separates it into two parts, always taking into consideration the sense. Then, to the first bar of the chant is chanted the first half of the verse, excepting the three last syllables, which are sung to the minims and semibreve of the two next bars respectively. If any small word, or article should occur in the three last syllables, it is generally to be sung to one of the minims of the second bar, without being reckoned as a principal syllable: and if the word immediately preceding the division of the verse consists of two syllables, or if it be a longer word having a strong accent on the penult, or last syllable but one, as the word "salvation"—in these cases two syllables are sung to the last note. The second part of the verse is sung to the first bar of the second strain of the chant, except the five last syllables, which are sung to the four minims and the semibreve of the second strain respectively. And as above, if any small words or articles occur in the five last syllables, they may be sung on one of the minims where the effect will be best. And if the verse ends with a word of two syllables, or with a polysyllabic word having its accent on the penult, the last word of the chant is to have these syllables. This describes the manner of singing a single chant, but as a double chant is merely a repetition of the same number of bars, no farther direction is needed.

The great variety of sublime expressions in the verse psalms, renders it impossible to make any general rules, which can meet every case in applying them to the chants. And indeed, this style of singing is so peculiar, that perhaps no rules will be of much benefit. A truly good manner of chanting cannot be acquired, without the assistance of some person competent to teach it. As regards the division of the words, this book furnishes it, for all the ordinary services of the church. But no book can teach the tone and utterance which constitute the great beauty of chanting, and which render it, when well performed, the most devotional of all kinds of music, and of course the best adapted to the worship of the Church of God. We could wish that it were more general, and that instead of the metre version, which is often very feeble, compared with the Psalter, we could use portions of the prose Psalms and have them sung to chants instead of psalm tunes. A proposition was made to this effect, and a selection from the prose Psalms was published in reference to it, some years ago by the Rev. Dr. Smith of Connecticut.

Could we have chanting in perfection, it should be as it was designed, and as it is practised in the Cathedral Churches of England, a responsive service. When there are large choirs they might be divided into two equal parts, and be placed on each side of the organ. One side corresponding to what in the Cathedrals is termed "Decani," should sing the chant through once, taking one verse if a single chant, and two if a double one. The other side, called "Cantoris," should respond in the same manner. The Gloria Patri should be sung by the whole unitedly. And in congregations, where the singing is, as it should ever be, general, where would be the difficulty of having the portion of the congregation on one side of the broad aisle to respond in its chanting the other? Where the vocal worshippers of God are, as is unhappily too much the case in our churches, few in number, such an arrangement should not be attempted. But may we not hope that sacred music will be more cultivated than heretofore. There is no want of attention to the music of the world, and no sparing of expense in acquiring a knowledge of it. Why should not religious persons, and above all religious parents, take some interest in the music that appropriately belongs to God, and learn themselves, and have their children taught, how to give a correct and melodious expression to the sacred songs of Zion. Then would the services of the sanctuary appear in their full beauty and solemnity. And while confessing our sins with heartfelt penitence, praying and giving thanks with earnest devotion, hearing the sacred word with attentive and willing minds, we should also most delightfully and profitably "speak to ourselves in psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in our hearts to the Lord."

The three preceding Tables have been prepared with a design of aiding persons in selecting portions of the Psalms and Hymns appropriate to particular subjects, or to the services of the Church, and in adapting to them suitable tunes.

Tables I. and II. contain respectively a reference to selections from the metre version of the Psalms, and to the whole collection of Hymns, and will be easily understood.

In the adaptation of tunes, there will be a great variety of judgment, and for this reason a space has been left opposite to each Psalm or Hymn, to give opportunity for writing the names of other tunes according to the taste of different choirs or individuals.

Table III. is a reference to Psalms appropriate to the order of the ecclesiastical year, and to other occasions of public worship. The Psalm is mentioned, and the small figure refers to 1st. 2d. 3d. &c. portions, as laid down in Table I. There was no necessity for referring to Hymns as they are already arranged upon this principle.

☞ In re-arranging the words to the Chants, the Publisher has followed the valuable arrangement of Dr. Edward Hodges, Conductor of the Music in Trinity Parish, New-York,—except in the phrase, "World without end, Amen." In this he has been governed by the published arrangements of Mr. James Stimpson, Organist of St. Andrews, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Mr. Robert Janes, Organist of Ely Cathedral, England. The additional notes for the Amen have been retained in the old Chants, and may be used if preferred.

Since this edition has been worked off the Publisher has discovered several unimportant errors. For example: in Cantate Domino No. 4, p. 225, the words, "house of," should be sung to the notes of the second bar, and the word "Israel," to the third bar, as in Cantate No. 1, 2 and 3. Also, the paging of the supplement should read 240, &c. instead of 340, &c.; and there are a few places where the words were so crowded between the bars of the music as to render it impossible to alter the plates and arrange the words as desired. There may be a few other errors which hasty examination has not detected. J. A. S.

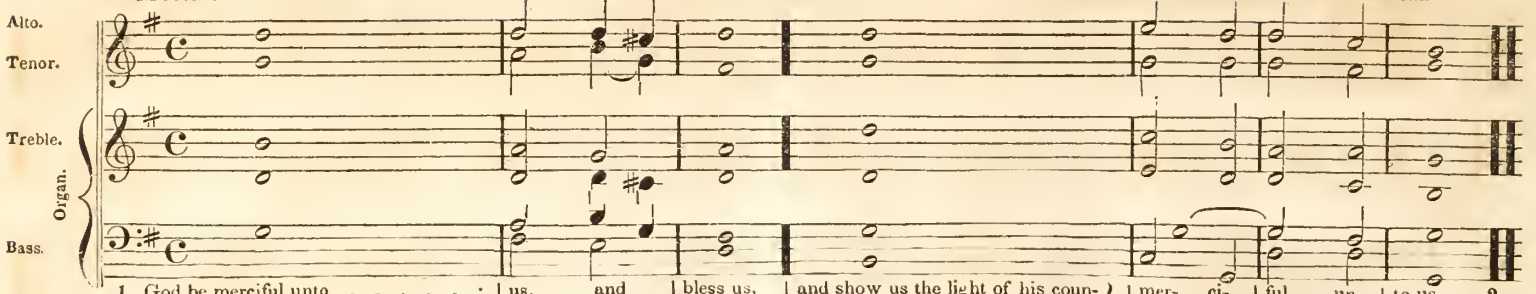
1. It is a good thing to give thanks un- | to the | Lord | and to sing praises unto thy . . | name . . | O most | Highest; 2.
3. Upon an instrument of ten strings and up- | on the | lute; | upon a loud instrument . . | and up- | on . the | harp. . 4.
5. Glory be to the Father, ... | and to the | Son, | and . . . . . | to the | Ho- ly | Ghost; 6.
2. To tell of thy loving kindness early | in the | morning, | and of thy . . . . . | truth in the | night . . | season; 3.
4. For thou Lord hast made me . . . | glad through thy | works; | and I will rejoice in giving praise, for the ope- | ra- tions | of thy | hands; 5.
6. As it was in the beginning, is now and | ev- er | shall be | world . . . . . | with- out | end. A- | men.

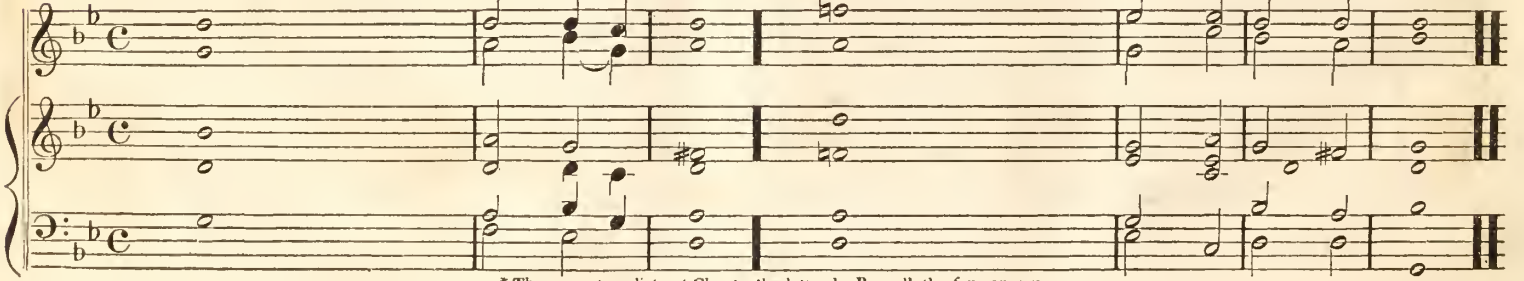
DEUS MISEREATUR.

MORNING PRAYER. After the Second Lesson. H. PURCELL *



1. God be merciful unto	us, and	bless us,	and show us the light of his countenance, and be	mer- ci-	ful un-	to us, 2.
2. That thy way may be	known upon	earth,	thy saving	health a-	mong all	nations, 3.
3. Let the people	praise thee, O	God;	yea, let all the	peo- ple	praise , ,	thee, 4.
4. O let the nations re-	joice and be	glad;	for thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the	na- tions	up- on	earth, 5.
5. Let the people	praise thee, O	God;	yea, let all the	peo- ple	praise . .	thee, 6.
6. Then shall the earth bring	forth her	increase;	and God, even our own	God, shall	give us his	blessing, 7.
7. God	shall	bless us;	and all the ends of the	world shall	fear . .	him, 8.
8. Glory be to the Father, . . .	and to the	Son,	and	to the	Ho- ly	Ghost, 9.
9. As it was in the beginning, is now and	ev- er	shall be,	world	with- out	end, A-	men,

MINORE.



* These are two distinct Chants, the latter by Purcell, the former not.

BENEDIC, ANIMA MEA.

EVENING PRAYER, PSALM CIII. After the Second Lesson.

1. Praise the Lord	O	my	soul,	and all that is within me . .	praise	his	ho- ly	name. 2.
3. Who forgiveth	all	thy	sin,	and	heal- eth	all	thine in-	firmities. 4.
5. O praise the Lord, ye angels of his, ye that ex-	cel	in	strength,	ye that fulfil his command- ment, and hearken un-	to	the	voice of his	word. 6.
8. Glory be to the Father, ...	and	to the	Son,	and	to	the	Ho- ly	Ghost. 9.

2. Praise the Lord	O	my	soul,	and for-	get	not	all his	benefits. 3.
4. Who saveth thy life	from	de-	struction	and crowneth thee with . .	mercy	and	lov- ing	kindness. 5.
6. O praise the Lord all	ye	his	hosts,	ye servants of	his	that	do his	pleasure. 7.
7. O speak good of the Lord all ye works of his, in all places of	his	do-	minion.	Praise thou the	Lord		O my	soul. 8.
9. As it was in the beginning, is now, and	ev-	er	shall be,	world	with-	out	end. A-	men.
